

Chapter 1: Chronicles

1.1 INTRODUCTION

TODO: Write me.

1.2 SITES OF MEMORY IN THE BOOK OF CHRONICLES

we have plenty of language to describe the various processes of individual memory, but one of the main problems we have when talking about social memory and cultural memory is that we lack good language describe the structures and functions of those mnemonic systems at the level of society. As such, memory theorists have adopted a number of analogies and terms to describe how societies remember and how individuals and groups interact with memory at the social level.

It is important to remember that because social memory is a social construct we must not equate the remembered past with the events, experiences, and individuals which informed it. Where one might refer to an individual person having “a memory” of a particular event, there is no central repository—be it material or biological—of social memory.¹ As has been noted by numerous memory theorists, “there is no such ‘thing’ as social or collective memory”²

1. See especially Jens Brockmeier, “After the Archive: Remapping Memory,” CP 16 (1 2010): 5–35 and James V. Wertsch, “Beyond the Archival Model of Memory and the Affordances and Constraints of Narratives,” CP 17 (1 2011): 21–29.

Rather, social memory should be thought of as a schematic representation of a set of mnemonic “sites.” It is an abstraction. In much the same way that historiography offers a narratized schematic of past events which necessarily is selective and intentional about what specific events, people, and ideas are germane to the purpose of the historian, so too social memory is selective of the particulars which it preserves.

These particulars are commonly referred to by memory theorists as “sites” of memory, a term coined by Pierre Nora in the 1970’s which has been adopted and adapted by numerous theorists since then.³ Although Nora did not clearly define the term, a “site of memory” (lieux

2. Ian D. Wilson, Kingship and Memory in Ancient Judah (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2017), 14 citing Jeffrey K. Olick and Joyce Robbins, “Social Memory Studies: From ‘Collective Memory’ to the Historical Sociology of Mnemonic Practices,” ARS 24 (1998): 105–40 and James V. Wertsch, “Collective Memory,” in Memory in Mind and Culture, ed. Pascal Boyer and James V. Wertsch (2009), 117–37.

3. The term was originally coined by Nora in the work “Mémoire collective,” in La Nouvelle histoire, ed. Roger Chartier Jacques Le Goff and Jacques Revel (Paris: Retz, 1978), 398–401, and used subsequently in Les Lieux de mémoire, 7 vols. (Paris: Gallimard) and “Between Memory and History: Les Lieux de Mémoire,” in “Special Issue: Memory and Counter-Memory,” Representations 26 (1989): 7–24. For a discussion of Nora’s use of the term and its reception, see Andrzej Szpociński, “Sites and Non-Sites of Memory,” in “Special Issue English Edition: Place and Memory,” TD 9 (2016): 245–54.

de mémoire), as used by Nora, might better be translated as a “place of remembrance.” For Nora, modern-day “sites” of memory existed “because there are no longer milieux de mémoire, real environments of memory.”⁴ In other words, because modern historical consciousness, by Nora’s reckoning, has all but eradicated “memory,” the preservation of memory in the modern era has been relegated to particular “sites” of memory—monuments, structures, and practices whose purpose is to perpetuate memory. He writes:

Lieux de mémoire are simple and ambiguous, natural and artificial, at once immediately available in concrete sensual experience and susceptible to the most abstract elaboration. Indeed they are lieux in three senses of the word—material, symbolic, and functional. Even an apparently purely material site, like an archive, becomes a lieu de mémoire only if the imagination invests it with a symbolic aura. A purely functional site, like a classroom manual, a testament, or a veterans’ reunion belong only inasmuch as it is also the object of a ritual. And the observation of a commemorative minute of silence, an extreme example of a strictly symbolic action, serves as a concentrated appeal to memory by literally breaking the temporal continuity.⁵

Sites of memory, therefore, are not entirely abstract and intellectual but bear on the practice and materiality of a society in addition to its symbolic significance.

Although Nora’s original use of the term tended to focus especially on sites of memory which bear on so-called “great traditions”⁶ of political and ideological importance such as national monuments and archives, the modern use of the term tends to be more abstract and to

4. Nora, “Between Memory and History,” 7.

5. Ibid., 18–19.

6. As coined by Redfield in Peasant Society and Culture (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1956), 41–42.

refer to any “place” where memory discourses occur within a society. For our purposes, and following a number of modern practitioners of memory studies, I will use the term “site” of memory to describe any discrete person, place, practice or idea where such discourses of memory occur.⁷

1.2.1 King David as a Site of Memory

Within the memory of ancient Israel, it is unquestionably the case that the figure David was a prominent site of memory for ancient Israel and the book of Chronicles engages with that mnemonic site extensively.

1.2.2 The Jerusalem Temple as a Site of Memory

1.2.3 Magnetism and Convergence of Mnemonic Sites

Section Conclusions

7. Within Hebrew Bible studies, see especially the work of Ehud Ben Zvi as well as his student Ian Wilson, esp. Ehud Ben Zvi, “Chronicles and Social Memory,” ST 71.1 69–90 and Wilson, Kingship and Memory, 25–26.

Bibliography

- Ben Zvi, Ehud. "Chronicles and Social Memory." ST 71.1 69–90.
- Brockmeier, Jens. "After the Archive: Remapping Memory." CP 16 (1 2010): 5–35.
- Nora, Pierre. "Between Memory and History: Les Lieux de Mémoire." In "Special Issue: Memory and Counter-Memory." Representations 26 (1989): 7–24.
- , ed. Les Lieux de mémoire. 7 vols. Paris: Gallimard.
- . "Mémoire collective." Pages 398–401 in La Nouvelle histoire. Edited by Roger Chartier Jacques Le Goff and Jacques Revel. Paris: Retz, 1978.
- Olick, Jeffrey K., and Joyce Robbins. "Social Memory Studies: From 'Collective Memory' to the Historical Sociology of Mnemonic Practices." ARS 24 (1998): 105–40.
- Redfield, Robert. Peasant Society and Culture. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1956.
- Szpociński, Andrzej. "Sites and Non-Sites of Memory." In "Special Issue English Edition: Place and Memory." TD 9 (2016): 245–54.
- Wertsch, James V. "Beyond the Archival Model of Memory and the Affordances and Constraints of Narratives." CP 17 (1 2011): 21–29.
- . "Collective Memory." Pages 117–37 in Memory in Mind and Culture. Edited by Pascal Boyer and James V. Wertsch. 2009.
- Wilson, Ian D. Kingship and Memory in Ancient Judah. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2017.

Vita

My life.